Chromosome

Nucleosome

DNA Structure

Each chromosome contains thousands of genes. In genes, a sequence of DNA codes that is kept apart so that it can be used to transmit the information for other chromosome events.

Copying DNA

The sequence of DNA is copied through the copying of chromosomes. The double chromosome is unwound and each strand is used as a template or pattern to create a new strand.

Making a Protein

Transcription

Each nucleotide sequence is copied. This is the first step in the process of making a protein. The sequence of the DNA is copied into a sequence of RNA. The RNA is then used to make a protein.

Translation

The sequence of the RNA is used to make a protein. The sequence of the RNA is read in groups of three, called codons. Each codon codes for a specific amino acid. The amino acids are then joined together to form a protein.

Protein

The protein is then used to perform a function in the cell.

How Genes Work

Genes are sections of DNA that code for a specific protein. The sequence of the bases in a gene determines the sequence of the amino acids in a protein.

Each gene is made up of a sequence of bases. The bases are arranged in a double helix structure. The bases are paired together by hydrogen bonds. The bases are adenine, thymine, guanine, and cytosine.

DNA Structure

The structure of DNA is a double helix. It is made up of two strands of sugar-phosphate groups, with nitrogenous bases in the middle. The bases are paired together by hydrogen bonds. The bases are adenine, thymine, guanine, and cytosine.

Copying DNA

When a cell divides, it must copy its DNA. This process is called DNA replication. It involves making a new strand of DNA using the original strand as a template.

Making a Protein

Proteins are made from amino acids. The sequence of the bases in a gene determines the sequence of the amino acids in a protein. This process is called translation.

Transcription

Transcription is the process of making a messenger RNA (mRNA) molecule from a DNA template. The mRNA molecule then carries the genetic code to the ribosome, where it is used to make a protein.
