Abstract: This article is a critical analysis of the work of the American Psychological Association (APA) and the American Psychiatric Association (APA) in the area of mental health. It discusses the role of these organizations in the development of mental health policy and practice, and the impact of their work on the lives of people with mental illness. The article also examines the role of the media in the dissemination of information about mental health, and the impact of this on public opinion and policy.

These findings are the following: only three products exhibited significantly an increased risk of cancer in a meta-analysis of 100 to 1000 cases for the same cancer.
