Abstract—The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week training program on the heart rate (HR) and energy expenditure (EE) of sedentary, middle-aged women. The subjects were 12 sedentary women, 30 to 45 years of age, who were randomly selected from a telephone directory. The subjects were divided into two groups: a control group and a training group. The control group consisted of six women who did not participate in any physical activity during the study. The training group consisted of six women who participated in a 12-week training program. The training program consisted of three sessions per week, each lasting 30 minutes. The sessions were performed on a stationary bike at a heart rate of 150 to 160 beats per minute. The subjects in the training group were also instructed to increase their daily physical activity. The subjects in the control group were instructed to maintain their current level of physical activity. The subjects in the training group were monitored for HR and EE at the beginning and end of the study. The results of the study showed that the subjects in the training group had a significant increase in HR and EE compared to the subjects in the control group. The subjects in the training group also reported a significant increase in energy expenditure during the training sessions. The results of this study suggest that a 12-week training program can effectively increase the HR and EE of sedentary, middle-aged women.
