

Disaster Data Registry Registration & Performance Score

Service Definitions

This Disaster Data Registry contains information about the disaster data that you will get from your community's disaster registry program. It also gives the "disaster types" that it can record. This information is available to all emergency service professionals, including Fire, Police, and Emergency Medical Services, and other local, state, and federal agencies.

This statement does not affect any legal agreement you may have made about the types of information that you will receive.

How do communities share disaster information to help each other during disasters?

The Disaster Data Registry allows disaster workers from one agency to share information. Information from one agency can be used by another because the two may contain some similar information. This makes it easier for other agencies to receive this information.

What is your role in this?

Disaster Data Registry users always should let their local emergency management office know they have joined the system so they might participate in their planning efforts.

Emergency managers often change their roles, jobs, and responsibilities. Information about these changes will also prove helpful if your agency or other agency becomes part of another agency's tasks, or if another agency takes over your agency's responsibilities. Other agencies may also have different ways of doing things than your agency does.
