

Police Recruiting and Hiring in Jurkanin's Article

✓ Exclusively available on IvyPanda

Jurkanin outlines some of the major issues that have an impact on police recruitments and hiring in different law enforcement settings. He likens police work to sports because it requires officers to be highly dedicated to their duties (24). He argues that for a senior police administrator to earn respect, he needs to think like a coach to boost the confidence of all officers in his team. Some of the important virtues police chiefs must include in their work include sacrifice, perseverance and respect for authority. These virtues also help sports coaches to succeed. During recruitment, police administrators need to understand how they can merge different talents of inexperienced officers. This makes them more motivated to deliver positive results in their duties. He adds that a police chief should inculcate virtues of team spirit in newly recruited officers to make them more united.

Law enforcement officers who adhere to high ethical standards demonstrate their willingness to respect and honor all expectations that are vested upon them by the public. This makes them fair and diligent in the manner they enforce the law to ensure criminal and other illegal acts which threaten peoples' safety are eliminated. They should not resort to unlawful methods to resolve complex criminal cases (Jurkanin 25). In some instances, law enforcers come up with compelling cases against suspected offenders who get away with serious crimes after they have been charged in court. These shortcomings should not make police officers lose their respect for the law because courts interpret cases brought before them differently. All law enforcement officers need to abide by the law as they perform their duties.

Police officers need to acquire advanced skills to help them deal with different crimes that happen in areas under their jurisdiction effectively. Police officers need to advance their scientific skills to enable them solve complex and mysterious crimes easily. They need to build partnerships with people living in different communities to make them well prepared to deal with various law enforcement challenges that may arise. Many police administrators do not take time to understand the true qualities of effective leadership (Jurkanin 26). However, just like football coaches, they are given very little time to prove their abilities while in office.

Modern Essays John Milton Berdan, John Richie Schultz, Hewette Elwell Joyce, 1915 The Police: Six Sociological Essays David Joseph Bordua, 1967 Three Essays in Development Economics David Russell Hansen, Gabriela Calderon Guemez, 2011

This dissertation is composed of three chapters. All three deal with topics in development economics. The first chapter examines the effects on village institutions of introducing formal financial institution options into the village. The second addresses the effects of government policy on educational investment and crime. The third tests the explanatory power of various explanations of the gender gap in math test scores.

The first chapter examines the effects of a transition from a traditional economy based on an uncertain source of income with risk fully insured away by one's neighbors in a social network through costly network ties to a modern economy in which some agents have access to partial insurance at a lower cost. A theoretical model is used to show that village social networks can break down as some members of the village no longer need the insurance the social network provides, producing a reduction in welfare if the costs of reducing moral hazard are not too high for at least some individuals and possibly the village as a whole. This loss of welfare can occur even when networks provide other benefits to those belonging to them and is likely to be heterogeneous depending on the opportunities and networks available to individuals. This paper tests these predictions using Indonesian data to examine the effect of a change in the banking institutions available to a community on the strength of social networks measured by community participation and welfare measured by household expenditure and by child health. The analysis finds that changing financial institution availability in general does not influence community participation or welfare but that financial institutions that primarily serve certain groups do relatively reduce the welfare of households not in those groups, which is consistent with the hypotheses generated by the model.

Crime is an important feature of economic life in many countries, especially in the developing world. Crime distorts many economic decisions because it acts like an unpredictable tax on earnings. In particular, the threat of crime may influence people's willingness to invest in schooling or physical capital. The second chapter explores the questions: What influence do crime rates and levels of investment have on one another? and How do government policies affect the relationship between investment and crime? by creating a simple structural model of crime and educational investment and attempting to fit this model to Mexican data. A method of simulated moments procedure is used to estimate parameters of the model, and the estimated parameters are then used to carry out policy simulations. The simulations show that increasing spending on police or increasing the severity of punishment reduces crime but has little effect on educational investment. Increased educational subsidies increase educational investment but reduce crime only slightly. Thus, one type of policy is insufficient to accomplish the goals of both reducing crime and increasing education.

The third chapter is joint work with Prashant Bharadwaj, Giacomo De Giorgi, and Christopher Neilson. Boys tend to have better performances than girls in mathematical testing; in particular, there are significantly more boys than girls among high achievers, and the score distribution appears to have a longer right tail for boys We confirm such results on several low and middle income countries In particular we find that the gender gap is already present by age 10 and substantially increases by age 14 and 15 We propose and try to test a series of explanations for such a gap i parental investment ii ability iii school resources iv individual investment and effort not tested directly v competitive environment and vi cultural norms We conclude that none of our proposed explanations can account for a substantial portion of the gap
