

A chemical reaction is a transformation of a chemical substance in which the substance's chemical and physical properties are permanently changed.

Why is it important to balance chemical equations?

Chemical reactions are governed by the law of conservation of mass. This means that the total mass of the reactants must equal the total mass of the products. Balancing chemical equations ensures that the number of atoms of each element is the same on both sides of the equation, which is necessary for the reaction to be valid.

What does the total law of conservation of mass mean when balancing equations?

The total law of conservation of mass means that the total mass of the reactants must equal the total mass of the products. This is because mass is neither created nor destroyed in a chemical reaction.

Week 8, Day 2

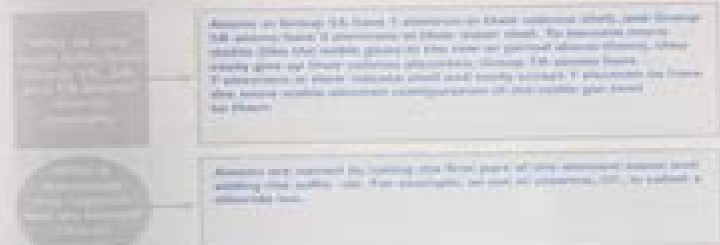

The number of protons in an atom cannot change (it is fixed) but a different number of neutrons can change. This is because neutrons are not involved in chemical reactions. The number of electrons can change, but only if the atom is ionized. In a chemical reaction, the number of electrons is conserved.

How does a positive ion form from a neutral atom? What is another name for a positive ion?

A positive ion forms from a neutral atom when it loses one or more electrons. This is because electrons are negatively charged, and their removal leaves the atom with a net positive charge. Another name for a positive ion is a cation.

How does a negative ion form from a neutral atom? What is another name for a negative ion?

A negative ion forms from a neutral atom when it gains one or more electrons. This is because electrons are negatively charged, and their addition gives the atom a net negative charge. Another name for a negative ion is an anion.

When positive and negative ions meet, the positive ions give up the electrons they gained, becoming neutral (positively charged ions) and the negative ions give up the electrons they gained, becoming neutral (negatively charged ions). The positively charged cations and the negatively charged anions are attracted to each other. This is how ionic bonds form. The resulting compound is called an ionic compound.
