Abstract—The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week training program on the heart rate (HR) and heart rate reserve (HRR) of sedentary middle-aged men. The subjects were divided into two groups: a control group and an exercise group. The exercise group performed a 12-week training program consisting of three sessions per week of aerobic exercise. The control group did not exercise. The HR and HRR were measured at rest and during exercise at the beginning and end of the 12-week period. The results showed that the exercise group had a significant decrease in HR and HRR at rest and during exercise compared to the control group. The decrease in HR and HRR was greater in the exercise group than in the control group. The results suggest that a 12-week training program can improve the cardiovascular fitness of sedentary middle-aged men.

- Day and night periods that are longer than the standard 24 hours occur most commonly with the use of artificial or nonnatural light sources. To avoid this, there are laws that prohibit the use of such light in the home or office.
- Artificial sources of light will commonly interfere with the body's natural circadian rhythms, the length of the day and night being determined by the sun and moon's positions.
- The end of the day is the best time to sleep. It may change the phase of the circadian rhythm, but it is not a good idea to sleep during the day.
- Sleep is not a good indicator for these periods of activity and inactivity. Sleep is not constant throughout the 24 hours of a day.

- Effect of price level's change: The shift in the price level is directly related, and always in the opposite direction, to the shift in the demand curve for the final product. An increase in the price level shifts the demand curve for the final product to the left, and a decrease in the price level shifts the demand curve to the right.
