For average grouped, the other two effects are not the same for all countries. In the ungrouped case, it is grouped by a single line, as in the following example. Below are:

In this case, 1 inch on the map equals 24,000 inches on the earth's surface, or about two-thirds of a mile. This is the map scale used on topographic maps produced by the United States Geological Survey (USGS). This map scale can also be expressed as the mathematical ratio $\frac{1}{24,000}$.

A large-scale group is one with a ratio that is a comparatively large real number. A small-scale group is one with a ratio that is a comparatively very small real number. Consider the amount of time and level of detail required, depending upon the type of map. For example, a map of the world requires a great deal of time and detail, and a map of a small area requires a comparatively small amount of time and detail. The ratio of the time and detail required for a large-scale map to the time and detail required for a small-scale map is a large real number, as well as when comparing such would mean.

Map Scale	1:50,000	1:1,000,000
Ratio	1 50,000	1 1,000,000
Scale Type	Large Scale	Small Scale
Area Covered	Small Area	Large Area
Level of Detail	High Detail	Low Detail
	City Region	State Region

Although there is no agreed-upon convention as to a dividing line between large and small-scale maps, think of 1:250,000 as the break point.

Projections

Projections
There probably won't be a question that asks you to differentiate between the projections on the AP Human Geography Exam, but they could ask you about the practical issues behind certain projections. Each given projection causes distortions of one or more of the four characteristics of the earth. A map projection's level of accuracy is based on the type of projection and shape preservation.

Significant projects include attempts to mainstream the collective spiritual sciences and the arts in the design. However, there was dissent that actual design professionals, such as the landscape practitioners handling and specifying the materials, could not be involved in the same way as the architects. Canada has a flat desert of green.

Confessional projects aim to maintain the shape of religious in the map. The problem is that confessional projections can cause the distortion of the map. The lines are part of the map to the extent. For instance, in the commonly used Mercator projection South America, which in reality is in much smaller

Some map projections try to balance area and form, sacrificing a bit of both in one or more visually practical representations of the earth's surface. Examples would be the Robinson projection or the Goode's homocylindrical projection.

MODELS

What Are Models?

What Are Models? A model is a simplified generalization of real-world geography that captures a specific aspect of the spatial world. Spatial models attempt to show the relationships between a variety of spatial phenomena. For instance, urban models try to show how different cities have similar spatial relationships and economic or social structures. There are also some non-spatial models. The Demographic Transition Model is a good example of a model that is not spatial, but that is useful in understanding the dynamics of human population growth in a wider geographic context.

Why Do We Use Them?

...the authors conclude that the model gives us a way to picture geographic patterns that are not necessarily visible to the human eye. These patterns are usually evident on topographic maps or aerial images. Models also allow us to address our questions in a general, abstract way. For example, the authors note that the model can be used to answer a general question about the relationship between the number of species and the area of a region. The concluding field notes suggest that the model can be used to answer a general question about the relationship between the number of species and the area of a region.
