Answer the following questions:

- 1.1 Describe the hydrologic cycle, components, and processes. The hydrologic cycle is a continuous cycle of water on Earth. It involves the movement of water between the atmosphere, land, and oceans. The cycle is driven by the sun's energy, which causes water to evaporate from the surface of the Earth. The water vapor then condenses into clouds, which release precipitation in the form of rain or snow. The precipitation then flows into bodies of water, such as rivers, lakes, and oceans, or infiltrates the ground to become groundwater. The water eventually returns to the atmosphere through evaporation or transpiration from plants.
- 1.2 Define erosion, and the following erosion parts: runoff, channels, meanders, oxbow lakes, and floodplains. Erosion is the process of wearing away the Earth's surface by the action of water, wind, or ice. Runoff is the flow of water over the land surface. Channels are the paths that water takes as it flows over the land. Meanders are the curved paths that a river or stream takes as it flows. Oxbow lakes are bodies of water that are formed when a meander in a river is cut off, leaving a lake that is isolated from the main body of water. Floodplains are the areas of land that are adjacent to a river or stream and that are subject to flooding.
- 1.3 Define drainage basin and divide. A drainage basin is the area of land that drains into a single body of water, such as a river or lake. A divide is the high ground that separates two drainage basins. Divides are often formed by mountains or hills.
- 1.4 Define drainage patterns, dendritic, and rectangular drainage patterns, radial, convergent, centric, and anastomosing. Drainage patterns are the ways in which water flows over the land surface. Dendritic drainage patterns are the most common, and they resemble the branching of a tree. Rectangular drainage patterns are formed by the action of joints in the rock. Radial drainage patterns are formed by the action of a central point, such as a volcano. Convergent drainage patterns are formed by the action of a central point, such as a river. Centric drainage patterns are formed by the action of a central point, such as a lake. Anastomosing drainage patterns are formed by the action of a central point, such as a river.
- 1.5 Describe how erosion, transportation, and deposition are affecting the land and water. Erosion is the process of wearing away the Earth's surface by the action of water, wind, or ice. Transportation is the process of moving the eroded material from one place to another. Deposition is the process of dropping the eroded material in a new location. Erosion, transportation, and deposition are all processes that are constantly occurring on the Earth's surface.
- 1.6 Define alluvial fans, braided rivers, and oxbow lakes. Alluvial fans are fans of sediment that are formed at the base of a mountain. Braided rivers are rivers that are composed of many small channels that are constantly shifting. Oxbow lakes are bodies of water that are formed when a meander in a river is cut off, leaving a lake that is isolated from the main body of water.
- 1.7 Describe how the land is affected by erosion, transportation, and deposition. Erosion is the process of wearing away the Earth's surface by the action of water, wind, or ice. Transportation is the process of moving the eroded material from one place to another. Deposition is the process of dropping the eroded material in a new location. Erosion, transportation, and deposition are all processes that are constantly occurring on the Earth's surface.
- 1.8 Define the different types of sediment and how they are transported. Sediment is the material that is eroded from the Earth's surface. It can be transported by water, wind, or ice. The different types of sediment are: sand, silt, clay, and gravel. Sand is the largest type of sediment, and it is transported by water, wind, or ice. Silt is the second largest type of sediment, and it is transported by water, wind, or ice. Clay is the smallest type of sediment, and it is transported by water, wind, or ice. Gravel is the largest type of sediment, and it is transported by water, wind, or ice.
