

When the Constitution, then only 17 years old, was signed, it was a revolutionary document. It was the first time in the history of the world that a group of men had agreed to limit their own power. They had created a government that was not to be feared, but to be trusted. They had created a government that was not to be used to oppress, but to protect. They had created a government that was not to be used to take away freedom, but to preserve it. They had created a government that was not to be used to destroy, but to build. They had created a government that was not to be used to divide, but to unite.
