

PHOTOLYSE STEMS AND LEAVES

Plants have structures that allow them to absorb light energy and convert it into glucose and oxygen.

Light energy from the sun is used to make glucose.

This is done in a process called photosynthesis.

- 1. Light energy is absorbed by chlorophyll in the leaves.
- 2. The light energy is used to split water molecules into hydrogen and oxygen.
- 3. The hydrogen is then used to reduce carbon dioxide into glucose.

Plants have two main types of leaves: broad and needle.

Broad leaves are found in most plants and are used to absorb light energy. They have a large surface area to capture as much light as possible. Needle leaves are found in some plants and are used to reduce water loss. They have a small surface area and a thick cuticle to prevent water from evaporating.
