1950

The beginning of the digital transformation movement, the microchip and today's widely used semiconductor are invented... meaning analog computing can now go digital.

1960

The first message is sent over ARPANET, the foundation of the Internet as we know it.

1970

Home computers are introduced and data entry jobs crop up to help businesses convert their analog records into digital data.

1990

The World Wide Web becomes publicly accessible and 3G network is introduced as digital cell phones begin selling commercially.

2018

Initiatives are built on a third computing platform formed from mobile tech, social media, cloud computing, big data, and IoT. The General Data Protection Regulation and the California Consumer Privacy Act get enforced.

2015

International Telecommunications Union approves the new 5G fast standard high speed transmission technology. Companies announce the expansion of fiber services across the U.S. Wi-Fi bandwidth surges and Intel's Internet of Things completed its first full year of operation.

2010

Cloud computing made its way into the development and testing environment for less than virtual services and apps while analytics took off in the enterprise landscape.

2019

80% of companies have already adopted AI. Others are having plans to do so by 2020.

COVID 19-20

Because of the COVID-19 pandemic, companies are moving previously on-premise tech to the cloud. Remote work becomes necessary due to quarantine restrictions. Education and other forms of business undergo platformization. And digital health solutions develop to keep patients away from patients and hospitals.
