This publication provides information on organic apple production from recent research and producer experience. Many aspects of apple production are the same whether the grower uses low-spray, organic, or conventional management. Accordingly, this publication focuses on the aspects that differ from nonorganic practices—primarily pest and disease control, marketing, and economics. (Information on organic weed control and fertility management in orchards is presented in a separate ATTRA publication, Tree Fruits: Organic Production Overview.) This publication introduces the major apple insect pests and diseases and the most effective organic management methods. It also includes farmer profiles of working orchards and a section dealing with economic and marketing considerations. There is an extensive list of resources for information and supplies and an appendix on disease-resistant apple varieties.

Acknowledgments

This publication draws on previous ATTRA publications on apple production written by Richard Earles, Guy Ames, Radhika Balasubrahmanyam, Holly Born, and Rex Dufout.

We recognize the tried-and-true experience of organic orchardists and draw extensively from them in this publication. Special thanks to the farms that agreed to be profiled in this publication: Elderberry Farm and Restaurant, Skaneateles, New York; Hoch Orchard and Gardens, LaCrescent, Minnesota; and Home Acres Orchard in Stevensville, Montana.

Introduction

Apples, Malus sp., are among the most difficult crops to grow organically. They are prone to attack by more pests than perhaps any other crop. Without effective management, the worst of these pests can be devastating—to the fruit, to the grower's spirit, and to the bottom line. To minimize or eliminate chemical inputs while keeping yields and profits sound, the grower must develop a detailed understanding of the orchard as a managed ecosystem. In this regard, there is no substitute for direct observation and experience, along with a willingness to experiment. As
