Management and Administration in Manufacturing Industries Leon Pratt Alford,1922 Technological Change and Labor Markets Reyna Elizabeth Rodríguez Pérez,Liliana Meza González,2024-10-28 In developed countries like the United States Germany and the UK it has been observed that workers who perform non routine activities either cognitive or manual have benefited in terms of employment and income while those performing routinary tasks have seen their job prospects and wages decline This has led to not only a polarization of the labor markets but also a decrease in certain measures of inequality This phenomenon has been attributed to task based technological change TBTC which differs from the skilled biased technological change in the fact that not only highly skilled workers have benefited from technology advancement This book presents evidence of how digitalization and TBTC are affecting the labor markets of different regions of the world and examines the factors that cause this inequality among nations It examines recent issues around the effect of

TBTC on the labor market and the economy in general with a comparison of different countries in Central and Eastern Europe North America and Latin America as well as in other regions of the world The incorporation of these regions presents relevant particularities for the subject matter addressed in the book The book also considers questions such as how labor market effects differ by gender and what the impact of digital skills on employment inequalities and public policies might be In so doing it identifies the advances opportunities and changes that have taken place while also making public policy proposals This book will be a key reading to the global community of graduate students and researchers in the field of economics and specifically in the study of labor markets

Promoting Healthy Aging Across the Lifespan Elena Carrillo-Alvarez, Miriam Rodriguez-Monforte, Jordi Vilaró, Katherine Simone McGilton, 2024-12-26 Worldwide there is a generalized trend toward aged societies Between 2015 and 2050 the proportion of the world's population over 60 years will nearly double from 12% to 22% As life expectancy continues to increase and natality rates lower not only the composition of countries will change but also its health landscape However an increased life expectancy does not necessarily mean a healthy life In most high income countries more than 20% of those years are lived in ill health due to chronic conditions caused by non communicable diseases which compromises functional ability and well being key components of healthy aging In this way not only people's lives but also societal structures are being affected Based on the life course approach to healthy aging aging starts from conception In this regard the promotion of healthy aging requires preventive strategies that enhance capacities during growth and development maintain them for as long as possible after maturity and slow down their rate of decline Moreover considering healthy aging across the lifespan entails focusing on different factors life opportunities and choices that might significantly influence health status lifestyle as well as health and social inequalities in older age and challenges the focus of most research on the topic which exclusively investigates the effect of influences operating in the later stages of life and Institutions Carlos Gradín, Piotr Lewandowski, Simone Schotte, Kunal Sen, 2023-06-22 This is an open access title available under the terms of a CC BY NC SA 3.0 IGO licence. It is free to read at Oxford Scholarship Online and offered as a free PDF download from OUP and selected open access locations. The book investigates the trends in earnings inequalities in developing countries to determine the main drivers. Particular attention is paid to extending the most conventional explanations of changes in earnings inequality based on the relative abundance of skilled and unskilled labour with recent theories that put the nature of tasks performed by workers in their jobs rather than their skills at the centre of the analysis. The latter approach has helped to explain relevant patterns recently observed in the trends in earnings inequality in the US and other industrialized countries. Developed countries have experienced a polarization in earnings and in employment, namely stronger growth in the earnings and jobs for the most and least skilled workers at the expense of those in the middle. This pattern has been attributed to differences in tasks, whether a given job is routine and can be automated or offshored rather than skills, and has reduced employment and incomes in typical middle class jobs in manufacturing and services. However, this narrative has been developed in the context of mature industrialized economies on the frontier of technological change that have also seen a large set of activities offshored to emergent economies. Evidence for developing countries, however, is still scarce and faces bigger challenges both conceptual and in terms of gathering the necessary data on earnings and task content of jobs. This book presents the main results of the UNU WIDER project The Changing Nature of Work and Inequality aiming to fill this knowledge gap. NYO., 1954 A Resurgent East Asia Andrew D. Mason, Sudhir Shetty, 2018-01-04 East Asia has been a paragon of global development success. The dramatic transformation of the region over the past half century, with a succession of countries having progressed from low income to middle income and even to high income status, has been built on what has come to be known as the East Asian development model. A combination of policies that fostered outward oriented labor intensive growth while strengthening basic human capital and providing sound economic governance has been instrumental in moving hundreds of millions of people out of poverty and into economic security. Yet East Asia's economic resurgence remains incomplete. More than 90 percent of its people now live in 10 middle income countries, many of which can realistically aspire to high income status in the next generation or two. But these countries are still much less affluent and productive than their high income counterparts. Even as the region's middle income countries attempt to move up to high income status, they confront a rapidly changing global and regional economic environment. Slowing growth in global trade and shifts in its patterns, rapid technological change and evolving country circumstances all present challenges to sustaining productivity growth, fostering inclusion and enhancing state effectiveness. A Resurgent East Asia: Navigating a Changing World is about how policy makers across developing East Asia will need to adapt their development model to effectively address these challenges in the coming decade and sustain the region's remarkable development performance. The world is changing. How do East Asia's developing economies navigate this change?

This is a commendable book on this topic a must read for policy makers academia and students who are interested in East Asia Chatib Basri Former Minister of Finance Government of Indonesia A Resurgent East Asia is a vital publication for the most successful region as it looks to the future and the expectations of its citizens This study helps to identify the new areas of risk and to suggest ways to ameliorate them In so doing it is an invaluable resource for governments Based on first rate analysis it is a must read for policy makers and everyone interested in East Asia's development prospects Danny Leipziger Managing Director The Growth Dialogue and Professor of International Business George Washington University This report delivers a careful and rigorous analysis of the strengths of East Asia's growth with equity development strategy While noting the model's success in lifting millions out of poverty the report also warns of the looming challenge of maintaining growth with inclusion and it highlights the need for countries to improve their social protection systems and ensure that opportunities are fair and available to all A must read for policy makers and development practitioners alike Ana Revenga Senior Fellow Brookings Institution

Is Technology Widening the Gender Gap? Automation and the Future of Female Employment Mariya Brussevich, Ms. Era Dabla-Norris, Salma Khalid, 2019-05-06 Using individual level data on task composition at work for 30 advanced and emerging economies we find that women on average perform more routine tasks than men tasks that are more prone to automation To quantify the impact on jobs we relate data on task composition at work to occupation level estimates of probability of automation controlling for a rich set of individual characteristics e.g. education age literacy and numeracy skills Our results indicate that female workers are at a significantly higher risk for displacement by automation than male workers with 11 percent of the female workforce at high risk of being automated given the current state of technology albeit with significant cross country heterogeneity The probability of automation is lower for younger cohorts of women and for those in managerial positions
