The capital control points for countries is calculated by the composite index using equally weighted for four indicators: official reserves, foreign currency, foreign debt, and foreign assets. In the context of the paper, we define countries as having high capital controls, if the composite index is greater than the average of the sample countries, and low capital controls, if the composite index is less than the average of the sample countries.

Students receive the results and signs for a period of 10 weeks later for the comparison with themselves and previously received results. A letter is sent to the student.

Abstract The authors examined the relationship between the frequency of sexual activity and the frequency of sexual satisfaction in a sample of 1,000 heterosexual couples. The results showed that the frequency of sexual activity was positively related to the frequency of sexual satisfaction. The results also showed that the frequency of sexual activity was positively related to the frequency of sexual satisfaction, but the relationship was not significant when the frequency of sexual activity was controlled for. The results suggest that the frequency of sexual activity is a significant factor in the frequency of sexual satisfaction, but the relationship is not significant when the frequency of sexual activity is controlled for.
