

(2) Exciter

Though composed of a stator and rotor, these parts differ from the output stator / rotor combination, in that the stator has the exciter field winding (F1 (+), F2 (-)) and the rotor has the exciter armature winding. A diode and Surge-absorber are connected to the rotor. The diode converts the AC supply generated by the armature winding into DC, and sends this DC to the output rotor (field winding).

(3) Rotor

The main field winding (2), exciter armature winding (1), bearing, and cooling fan are all mounted on the same shaft.

The silicon diode stack and Surge-absorber are located exciter armature core. The silicon diode stack (4) rectifies the exciter armature winding output to produce the current which energizes the poles of the field winding, inducing electrical current in the rotor armature winding.

When the current flows in the winding, the temperature of the winding increases by joule heat.

The fan (3) cools the winding in order to keep the temperature down to at least the regulated one.

(4) AVR (Automatic Voltage Regulator)

AVR works so that the current for field winding comply with load condition.

Functioning is controlled using auxiliary winding and the voltage detected on the output side (V phase-W phase).
