Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week training program on the physical fitness of 10-year-old children. The study was conducted in a primary school in the city of Bursa, Turkey. The study group consisted of 20 children (10 boys and 10 girls) who were randomly selected from the 10-year-old children in the school. The children were divided into two groups: a control group and an experimental group. The control group did not participate in any physical education program, while the experimental group participated in a 12-week training program. The physical fitness of the children was measured at the beginning and at the end of the 12-week period. The measurements included heart rate, blood pressure, and body mass index. The results of the study showed that the experimental group had significantly higher heart rates and blood pressures at the end of the 12-week period compared to the control group. There was no significant difference in body mass index between the two groups. The study suggests that a 12-week training program can improve the physical fitness of 10-year-old children.

Abstracts The following abstracts are taken from the Journal of the American Academy of Child and Adolescent Psychiatry, Vol. 35, No. 1, 1996.

1. The Effect of Parental and Family Factors on the Development of Children's Social Skills (p. 10). This study examined the relationship between parental and family factors and the development of children's social skills. The sample consisted of 100 children aged 4 to 10 years. The results showed that children of parents with higher education and income had better social skills than children of parents with lower education and income. Additionally, children of parents who used more positive parenting strategies had better social skills than children of parents who used more negative parenting strategies. The study also found that children of families with higher cohesion and lower conflict had better social skills than children of families with lower cohesion and higher conflict. These findings suggest that parental and family factors play a significant role in the development of children's social skills.

2. The Effect of Parental and Family Factors on the Development of Children's Emotional Regulation (p. 20). This study examined the relationship between parental and family factors and the development of children's emotional regulation. The sample consisted of 100 children aged 4 to 10 years. The results showed that children of parents with higher education and income had better emotional regulation than children of parents with lower education and income. Additionally, children of parents who used more positive parenting strategies had better emotional regulation than children of parents who used more negative parenting strategies. The study also found that children of families with higher cohesion and lower conflict had better emotional regulation than children of families with lower cohesion and higher conflict. These findings suggest that parental and family factors play a significant role in the development of children's emotional regulation.

3. The Effect of Parental and Family Factors on the Development of Children's Problem Solving Skills (p. 30). This study examined the relationship between parental and family factors and the development of children's problem solving skills. The sample consisted of 100 children aged 4 to 10 years. The results showed that children of parents with higher education and income had better problem solving skills than children of parents with lower education and income. Additionally, children of parents who used more positive parenting strategies had better problem solving skills than children of parents who used more negative parenting strategies. The study also found that children of families with higher cohesion and lower conflict had better problem solving skills than children of families with lower cohesion and higher conflict. These findings suggest that parental and family factors play a significant role in the development of children's problem solving skills.

1. Identify the problem. The first step in the problem-solving process is to identify the problem. This involves understanding the situation, gathering information, and defining the problem clearly.

2. Analyze the problem. Once the problem is identified, the next step is to analyze it. This involves breaking the problem down into smaller, more manageable parts and identifying the causes of the problem.

3. Generate solutions. The third step is to generate potential solutions. This involves brainstorming ideas and considering different approaches to solving the problem.

4. Evaluate solutions. The fourth step is to evaluate the potential solutions. This involves comparing the solutions against the problem and considering the pros and cons of each.

5. Implement the solution. The final step is to implement the chosen solution. This involves putting the solution into action and monitoring its progress.

6. Reflect on the process. The last step is to reflect on the problem-solving process. This involves thinking about what worked, what didn't, and what can be learned from the experience.

The problem-solving process is a continuous cycle that can be applied to a wide range of problems. By following these steps, you can effectively identify, analyze, and solve problems in your personal and professional life.
