After the Civil War, Reconstruction was the period when the federal government sought to rebuild the South and ensure that all citizens had equal rights. The Reconstruction Act of 1867 divided the South into military districts and required new state constitutions to be drafted. The 14th Amendment granted citizenship to all persons born or naturalized in the United States, and the 15th Amendment prohibited states from denying the right to vote based on race.

The Reconstruction Act of 1867 required that the South be divided into five military districts. Each district was governed by a military officer. The act also required that new state constitutions be drafted and approved by a majority of the voters. The Reconstruction Act of 1867 was a landmark piece of legislation that laid the foundation for the Reconstruction of the South.
