Nickel-Metal Hydride (NiMH) Batteries

Observe the following precautions when using Nikon EN-ELH1 and EN-ELH2a NiMH batteries.

- Do not interchange batteries with different or different capacities, and must be changed in the case of a 100% battery's longer battery life.

Batteries may become hot when charged. Observe the cautions when handling batteries during or after charging.

Water permeates the battery, and heat causes gas to rise from the electrolyte when charged with more cautions. This is normal and does not affect performance.

- New batteries and batteries that have been left unused for an extended period tend to lose their charge capacity. This is normal for typical batteries, and the batteries will reach a charge after being used and recharged several times.

Batteries will become hot when using the model's recharge mode quickly.

- The battery and charger terminals are covered thoroughly with a protective film before charging to remove fingerprints, and other things that can decrease the battery's performance.
- They are charged at an ambient temperature of 10–20°C (50–68°F).
- They are recharged with fully recharged or used until the battery has been discharged 100% and placed in the correct insertion position on charging.
