Abstract—In the distribution system, most of the power quality problems are associated with voltage sag. As a consequence, divergent solutions have been hunted to compensate this voltage sag to evade financial losses in commercial industries. Distribution Static Compensator (D-STATCOM) is now turning into more recognized in commercial industries to reduce the bad impacts of voltage sag in sensitive loads. The D-STATCOM is placed in shunt with a sensitive load and possesses the ability to respond speedily against the voltage sag experienced by sensitive equipment of end user.

This paper explained shunt reactive injection. The suggested methodology is to establish analytical aspects and to demonstrate this by a case study of 39 bus IEEE RTS system. Voltage sag can be eradicated by continuous injection of very small Voltage or reactive power to the system. The scheme incorporates the method of instantaneous symmetrical components.

1. INTRODUCTION

Power quality (PQ) is turning into critical importance for commercial industry. Low quality of power is perceived due to the different power quality issues like voltage sag, harmonics, voltage swell, interruption, etc. [1]. From Recent failure statistics, It is confirmed that the voltage sags represent the foremost common kind of disturbance within the power system [2-3]. Voltage sag can be defined as a transitory reduction (0.5–1 min) in RMS voltage between 0.1 and 0.9 p. u at the power frequency [1], [3]. Voltage sag leads to malfunction of voltage-sensitive electrical-electronics loads in commercial industries, hospitals and buildings [5] and causes severe process disruptions that lead substantial data and/or economic losses [6], [7]. Voltage sag is depicted by the magnitude of sag, duration of sag and its phase angle jump. The demand of better power quality has inspired the ultimate consumers to install power acquisition equipment for mitigation of voltage sag. There is some literature that interprets the potential for employing typical DC-DC converters as the direct AC/AC converters against voltage sag and swell problem. However, there is a certain limitation in their ability against asymmetrical sags [7–11]. Therefore, different devices like DVR, flywheel, distribution static compensator (DSTATCOM), tap changing transformers and uninterruptible power supplies (UPS) are used against voltage sags problems [12], [13]. DSTATCOM is used in this presented study to mitigate voltage sag. DSTATCOM is a Shunt connected FACTS device. It absorbs or generates reactive power. Its main function is to control the voltage and thereby to improve transient stability. A D-STATCOM is usually used to control bus voltage by reactive power shunt compensation. The D-STATCOM is a three-phase shunt connected power electronics based solid state device. It is attached near the load at the distribution systems. D-STATCOM consists of the coupling transformer, three-phase inverter and DC capacitor. D-STATCOM possesses compensating capability by means of either bus voltage or line current.

II. DSTATCOM

Distribution Static Compensator (D-STATCOM) is a precise effectual means for the amelioration of power quality consequence in the distribution system. D-STATCOM is a counterbalancing type custom power device. It is a shunt linked device that has the alike
