

Practical work in school science – why is it important?

Emma Woodley

ABSTRACT The reasons for carrying out practical work are explored and activities to increase the quality and relevance of practical work are described.

For most UK science teachers, practical work is part and parcel of what teaching and learning in science is all about. In fact, the TIMSS 2007 study (Sturman et al., 2008) found that, as has been the case for many years, 13- to 14-year-old pupils in England are more likely to spend their lesson time doing practical science activities than many of their international counterparts. It also found that science teachers in England tend to adopt a more ‘hands-on’ approach to their teaching.

Given that such a large proportion of time in science lessons is spent on practical work, it is important to be able to justify that amount of time by understanding the purposes of this type of activity as a tool for teaching and learning. But in order to understand why we use practical activities, we must first consider what practical work in science is.

Earlier this year SCORE (Science Community Representing Education) produced A framework for practical science in schools (SCORE, 2009a), defining practical work in science as ‘a “hands-on” learning experience which prompts thinking about the world in which we live’. The associated report (SCORE, 2009b) has a list of activities that could be considered to be practical work. These fall into two main categories:

- Core activities: Investigations, laboratory procedures and techniques, and fieldwork. These ‘hands-on’ activities support the development of practical skills, and help to shape students’ understanding of scientific concepts and phenomena.
- Directly related activities: Teacher demonstrations, experiencing phenomena, designing and planning investigations, analysing results, and data analysis using

ICT. These are closely related to the core activities and are either a key component of an investigation, or provide valuable first-hand experiences for students.

A range of activities were also identified which complement, but should not be a substitute for, practical work. These complementary activities include science-related visits, surveys, presentations and role play, simulations including use of ICT, models and modelling, group discussion, and group text-based activities. They have an important role to play supporting practical work in developing understanding of science concepts.

Purposes of practical work

Most practitioners would agree that good-quality practical work can engage students, help them to develop important skills, help them to understand the process of scientific investigation, and develop their understanding of concepts. A further consequence of experiencing practical work, particularly in chemistry, is the acquisition of an understanding of hazard, risk and safe working. These are just some of the many different reasons for choosing to use a practical activity in a lesson. The Framework for practical science in schools also identifies a multitude of ways in which practical work can support learning in science, from ‘Personal, learning and thinking skills’ to ‘How science works’ (Figure 1). Any single activity might focus on one or more of these purposes.

A good practical task is one that achieves its aims of effectively communicating a clearly defined set of ideas, but this can sometimes be difficult to achieve. Teachers’ identified outcomes can often be quite different from the outcomes that students perceive. With any activity, communicating its purpose and learning objectives to the students can increase its
