

Transpiration

← = MOVEMENT OF WATER

Transpiration Pull

- Transpiration pull is the force that pulls water up the xylem vessels in a plant.
 - 1. The water molecules in the xylem vessels are pulled up by the transpiration pull from the leaves.
 - 2. This creates a negative pressure in the xylem vessels, which pulls water up the stem.
- Water molecules are attracted to each other by cohesion, creating a continuous column of water up the stem.

Water Transport in Plants

- Water moves through the xylem vessels in a continuous, unbroken column from the roots to the leaves.
- Transpiration creates a negative pressure in the xylem, which pulls water up the stem towards the leaves.
- The water molecules are held together by cohesion between water molecules, creating a continuous column of water up the stem.
- At the top of the xylem vessels, the water molecules are pulled up the stem towards the leaves.
