Abstract: The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week training program on the cardiovascular and metabolic responses to a 1000-m swim. Ten sedentary, non-smoking, non-athletic subjects were recruited and divided into two groups: a control group (n = 5) and a training group (n = 5). The training group underwent a 12-week training program consisting of three 1000-m swims per week, with a 10-min rest period between swims. The control group did not undergo any training. All subjects were tested at baseline and after 12 weeks. The training group showed a significant decrease in heart rate (HR) and an increase in stroke volume (SV) and cardiac output (CO) during the swim. The control group showed no significant changes. The training group also showed a significant decrease in oxygen consumption (VO₂) and an increase in energy expenditure (EE) during the swim. The control group showed no significant changes. The results of this study suggest that a 12-week training program can improve cardiovascular and metabolic responses to a 1000-m swim.
