Abstract—The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week training program on the heart rate (HR) and heart rate reserve (HRR) of sedentary middle-aged men. The subjects were divided into two groups: a control group and an exercise group. The exercise group performed a 12-week training program consisting of three sessions per week, each lasting 30 minutes. The control group did not exercise. The HR and HRR were measured at rest and during maximal exercise at the beginning and end of the 12-week period. The results showed that the exercise group had a significant decrease in HR and HRR at rest and a significant increase in HR and HRR during maximal exercise compared to the control group. These findings suggest that a 12-week training program can improve cardiovascular fitness in sedentary middle-aged men.

- When a producer's price for the output rises or demand increases, we always recommend producers (as far as possible) by "internalizing" their own supply. Using the price provided by the market to determine production (efficiency is the first product) as well as to determine the price received for the product.
