Abstract—The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 10-week training program on the heart rate (HR) and heart rate reserve (HRR) of sedentary middle-aged men. The subjects were 15 men, 40 to 50 years old, who were sedentary and had no cardiovascular disease. They were randomly assigned to a 10-week training program or a control group. The training program consisted of 30 minutes of aerobic exercise, 3 times a week, at 70% of the maximum HR. The control group did not exercise. The HR and HRR were measured at rest and during exercise at the beginning and at the end of the 10-week period. The results showed that the training program significantly increased the HR and HRR of the subjects. The HR increased from 72 to 78 beats per minute (b·min⁻¹) and the HRR increased from 28 to 34 b·min⁻¹. The control group did not show any significant changes in HR or HRR. The results suggest that a 10-week training program can improve the cardiovascular fitness of sedentary middle-aged men.

- Day and night periods that are longer than the standard 24 hours occur most commonly with the use of artificial light or natural light at night. To reduce the risk of circadian rhythm disruption, it is recommended that the amount of artificial light be reduced to the lowest level possible.
- Artificial lights that emit red light with a wavelength of 620 nm or longer are less likely to disrupt circadian rhythms. The length of the exposure may also be important for the red light exposure. For example, 10 minutes of red light exposure may be sufficient to improve sleep quality, while 30 minutes of red light exposure may be sufficient to improve sleep quality.
- The use of artificial light at night may also increase the risk of circadian rhythm disruption. To reduce the risk of circadian rhythm disruption, it is recommended that the amount of artificial light be reduced to the lowest level possible.

When you install your T-Value One Connection, improper installation of all four screws (52 connections for One Connection®) will affect the overall health, safety and life of the system. Proper ventilation is critical to maintain proper ventilation. Failure to maintain proper ventilation may result in a variety of problems with the product.

- When a producer's price for the output rises or falls, it must adjust its output level accordingly. For example, if the price of the output rises, the producer will want to produce more of the output, and if the price falls, the producer will want to produce less of the output.
