Abstract—The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week training program on the heart rate (HR) and heart rate reserve (HRR) of sedentary middle-aged men. The subjects were divided into two groups: a control group and an exercise group. The exercise group performed a 12-week training program consisting of three sessions per week, each lasting 30 minutes. The control group did not exercise. The HR and HRR were measured at rest and during maximal exercise at the beginning and end of the 12-week period. The results showed that the exercise group had a significant decrease in HR and HRR at rest and during maximal exercise compared to the control group. The control group had no significant change in HR and HRR. The results suggest that a 12-week training program can improve the cardiovascular fitness of sedentary middle-aged men.

- Day and night periods that are longer than the standard 24 hours occur most commonly with the use of artificial light or continuous darkness. Tapes that are too long or too short can change the phase of the clock.
- Artificially imposed rhythms will eventually alter all biological rhythms in a population, the length of the day was first demonstrated by the use of constant darkness.
- The endogenous clock keeps time by changing the expression of certain genes, producing a feedback loop that keeps the clock ticking for three to five days. However, this is not sufficient for three periods of activity, sleep, and rest around the 24-hour day.
