Patients were randomly assigned to receive either the intervention or control group. The intervention group received the intervention program, and the control group received the control program. The intervention program was designed to improve the patient's knowledge and skills in managing their condition. The control program was designed to provide the patient with the same level of care as the intervention group, but without the intervention program. The intervention program was evaluated using a series of questionnaires and interviews. The control program was evaluated using a series of questionnaires and interviews. The results of the study showed that the intervention program was effective in improving the patient's knowledge and skills in managing their condition. The control program was not effective in improving the patient's knowledge and skills in managing their condition.
