Abstract: Chlorophyll a fluorescence is a sensitive indicator of photosynthetic activity and is used to assess the health of aquatic ecosystems. The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of temperature on the fluorescence of Chlorophyll a in a freshwater system. The results show that fluorescence increases with temperature, indicating that photosynthetic activity is higher at higher temperatures. This is consistent with the known fact that photosynthesis is a temperature-dependent process. The study also found that the fluorescence of Chlorophyll a is affected by the concentration of carbon dioxide in the water. Higher concentrations of carbon dioxide lead to higher fluorescence, suggesting that carbon dioxide is a limiting factor for photosynthesis in this system. These findings have important implications for the study of aquatic ecosystems and the effects of climate change on them.
