The Eye and Vision: Anatomy

1. Anatomically, the eye is a spherical organ that is approximately 2.5 cm in diameter. It is composed of several layers, including the cornea, sclera, iris, ciliary muscles, lens, vitreous body, and retina. The retina is the light-sensitive layer at the back of the eye that converts light into electrical signals that the brain can interpret.

Cornea: transparent, curved front part of the eye

Sclera: white, outer layer of the eye

Iris: colored part of the eye

Ciliary muscles: muscles that control the shape of the lens

2. The ciliary muscles are responsible for changing the shape of the lens to focus light on the retina. When the ciliary muscles contract, the lens becomes more rounded, increasing its refractive power. When they relax, the lens becomes flatter, decreasing its refractive power.

Vitreous body: clear, gel-like substance

3. The lens is a biconvex structure that focuses light onto the retina. It is made of a transparent, crystalline material that is held in place by ciliary muscles. The lens is responsible for most of the eye's refractive power.

4. The retina is the light-sensitive layer at the back of the eye. It contains photoreceptors (rods and cones) that convert light into electrical signals. The optic nerve carries these signals to the brain, where they are interpreted as visual information.

Optic nerve: carries visual information from the retina to the brain

5. The eye is a complex organ that is capable of seeing a wide range of colors and shapes. It is able to focus light on the retina and convert it into electrical signals that the brain can interpret.
