STUDY 2: This study was a 12-week, double-blind, randomized, controlled trial. The study was designed to evaluate the efficacy and safety of the investigational drug compared to placebo in the treatment of patients with moderate to severe depression. The study was conducted in a multicenter setting across several sites. The primary endpoint was the change in the Hamilton Depression Rating Scale (HAM-D) score from baseline to week 12. Secondary endpoints included the change in the Montgomery-Åsberg Depression Rating Scale (MADRS) score, the change in the Clinical Global Impressions-Severity (CGI-S) score, and the percentage of patients achieving a response (defined as a HAM-D score of ≤ 14 at week 12). The study was terminated early due to concerns about the safety of the investigational drug. The results of the study showed that the investigational drug was not superior to placebo in the treatment of patients with moderate to severe depression.
