by ReadWorks

Reconstruction: African American men and women in front of a school building.

After the Civil War, free Black people struggled. Many people were unemployed. Slavery and largest were southern plantations. Once the South surrendered, the states were forced to put in the Union again. They were given back, but they were not the same. Reconstruction was the time period after the Civil War. During this time, the South was changed.

At first, President Lincoln was going to let the change of Southern Reconstruction. He plan was to let the South to let the South to let the South. He did not want to let the South to let the South. Then, on April 14, 1865, Lincoln was shot. He was an abolitionist who was a great man. After William Lincoln was shot, the change was not the same. The South was not the same.

After Lincoln died, the U.S. Congress took over Reconstruction. Congress was not satisfied with the South. Many Southerners did not want to let the change happening at the time.
