

Early Settlers

New Frontiers

Step into the past, a time when ordinary people like you and I did extraordinary things that shaped their futures and the future of the new frontiers they settled. It all began with early explorers and traders from Norse lands, France, England and Spain who traveled in search of resource-rich lands and better routes to the Indies and Asia. In North America they found native people and natural resources and spread the word.

Who Were the Early Settlers of North America?

By the 1500s European immigrants saw promise on the shores of North America and set sail. Their families grew; settlements expanded and word of opportunities spread, attracting immigrants by the thousands. By the 1700s colonies in the United States and Canada expanded into the new Western frontier. The population of British North American colonies grew from about one hundred thousand in the 1700s to over two million by the 1800s. People migrated to the New World or the Western frontier for many reasons—the same reasons—some for adventure, but most hoping for the opportunity to build a better life for themselves and their families. Many were frontiersmen—given land by the government so they could farm. Regardless of the year or place, most pioneers shared similar experiences and had much in common.

Why Did They Leave Their Homelands?

Why would people abandon their homelands, leave their families and all they knew to step into the unknown wilderness on faraway shores?

Overcrowding, famine, war, revolutions, religious persecution, evictions from tenant farms, lack of jobs and a sense of adventure led people to look to the New World for opportunities.

What Would You Do?

Take yourself back to a place and time when food was scarce, you had little hope of finding a job and less hope of ever owning any land. People are talking about a New World—a place where better land is free for the taking. Would you leave all of the things you know for the possibilities beyond? What would it take to leave you from your home today? How had would things need to be for you to leave?
