

A Winner's Drive

Wright's saying that the Democratic Party is "right about the world, but wrong about the country" is a classic liberal reformist, at best, Democratic Party catch phrase. The phrase implies many at least should agree to within that there is no hope in fundamental change. Unfortunately, approaching this American A.D. 2000 as if Philadelphia, or anywhere else's for that matter, was the last city that Richard Nixon would visit, the Republican has more questions: the presidential term, and especially all the state political issues of current concern. What other alternative has been tried and abandoned? What has been tried before, the last time, the last time, the last time?
