This refers to the biological, physiological and molecular changes in response to perturbations, to prevention and therapeutic interventions.

Abstract: A comparison of the perceived quality of life between patients with chronic obstructive pulmonary disease (COPD) who were treated with a long-acting beta₂-agonist (LABA) or a LABA plus an inhaled corticosteroid (ICS) was conducted. The study included 60 patients from two tertiary care hospitals. All patients had been treated with either LABA or LABA plus ICS for at least 8 weeks before entering the study. The primary outcome measure was the mean change in the St George's Respiratory Questionnaire score over 8 weeks. Secondary outcomes included changes in lung function, health-related quality of life, and patient satisfaction. The results showed that the LABA group had a significantly greater improvement in the St George's Respiratory Questionnaire score compared to the LABA plus ICS group. These findings suggest that treatment with a LABA may provide better overall quality of life for COPD patients compared to treatment with a LABA plus ICS.
