

Political Science 1001 – American National Government

Study Guide for Exam 1C

What makes a good democracy "participatory"? Approximately what percentage of Americans participate in the various political activities? What are the causes of these patterns?

Answer: Citizens who have more time, more money, and more social resources are more likely to be active.

What are the main reasons for the consistently disproportionate Democratic participation in political science? Does "partisanship" affect us more or less?

Answer: Partisan polarization and other social identity commitments drive the sort of voting "habits" that we have.

What are the main differences, and similarities, between the two major parties and ability to reliably measure public opinion?

Answer: Different patterns of social spending, different levels of spending on advertising, different policies that are not supported by voters, and different levels of support for the president.

Answer: The two major parties are the only ones that have the ability to reliably measure public opinion.
