Several types of fall from height injuries to construction workers are common, but they are not always preventable. Working from roofs, ladders, scaffolds, and hydraulic excavators, cranes, and other devices that lift workers off the ground are possible causes of falling. Working from elevated surfaces, such as roofs, can be particularly dangerous. Falls from roofs are the leading cause of death among construction workers, according to the Bureau of Labor Statistics. Falls from roofs are also the leading cause of injury among construction workers, according to the Bureau of Labor Statistics.
