 Measure how well students demonstrate effort, responsibility, and good

Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program on the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women. The study was a randomized, controlled trial. The subjects were 40 sedentary, middle-aged women who were randomly assigned to either a supervised walking program or a control group. The walking program consisted of 12 weeks of supervised walking, 3 times per week, for 30 minutes per session. The control group consisted of 20 women who did not participate in the walking program. The physical and psychological health of the women in the walking program was measured at baseline and at 12 weeks. The physical health measures included heart rate, blood pressure, and body mass index. The psychological health measures included self-esteem, anxiety, and depression. The results of the study showed that the women in the walking program had significantly lower heart rates, blood pressures, and body mass indices at 12 weeks compared to the control group. The women in the walking program also had significantly higher self-esteem, lower anxiety, and lower depression at 12 weeks compared to the control group. The results of this study suggest that a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program can improve the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women.
