- There is not an independent variable because the independent variable may result in the dependent variable in this design
- There is not the assumption that one treatment and figure containing both conditions, it will make the difference in the results smaller
- Yes I think the design is confounding, high temperature is a confounder for the independent variable
- There may be omitted variables because after the design a comparison may be made on how many and it might change the third variable
- It is not enough to eliminate the third variable because omitted variables can change it
- It is not there, but it exists only for these because high temperature is not better for these people, and it may cause the opposite
