

Keystone Species

Saguaro Cactus

What is a keystone species?

A keystone species is a species that has a disproportionately large effect on its environment relative to its abundance. The concept was developed by ecologist Robert Paine in 1969, based on his studies of intertidal rocky shore communities.

Keystone species are often predators, but they can also be engineers, mutualists, or other types of organisms. The removal of a keystone species from an ecosystem can have cascading effects on the other organisms in the system, often leading to a loss of biodiversity and a change in the structure and function of the ecosystem.

Why is the saguaro a keystone species?

The saguaro cactus is a keystone species in the Sonoran Desert because it provides food and shelter for many other organisms. It is a primary food source for many birds, including the saguaro hawk, and it provides nesting sites for many other birds. It also provides shelter for many other organisms, including lizards, snakes, and small mammals.

For more information on the saguaro cactus, visit the Sonoran Desert Museum website at www.sdmuseum.org.
