Phenomenon of Political Romanticism Alexandra Aidler argues that despite modern democracy's problematic heritage one should not abandon its claims to religion Articulating a democracy that is based on the religious principle of giving oneself to another Aidler develops a political theology of democracy that is built upon two traditions in political thought that have rarely been examined thus far side by side for their contributions to this field German Romanticism as exemplified by Franz von Baader and Friedrich Schlegel and the theological turn in French philosophy as represented by Jacques Derrida and Jacques Rancière
