During childhood, people in the United Kingdom, like those in most other countries, are not as likely to be vaccinated as people in the United States. In the United Kingdom, the vaccination schedule for children is based on the National Immunisation Schedule, which is a list of diseases that are considered to be most likely to cause serious illness or death. The schedule is updated regularly, and the government provides free vaccinations for children. In the United States, the vaccination schedule is based on the Advisory Committee on Immunization Practices (ACIP) recommendations, which are based on the latest scientific evidence. The schedule is also updated regularly, and the government provides free vaccinations for children. In both countries, the vaccination schedule is designed to protect children from the most common and most serious infectious diseases. However, there are some differences between the two schedules. For example, the United Kingdom schedule includes a vaccine for whooping cough (diphtheria, tetanus, and pertussis) that is not included in the United States schedule. This is because whooping cough is a more common and more serious disease in the United Kingdom than in the United States. The most important findings were consistent for the 1990 and 1991 periods. While the 1991 results (1.5/1.5) were slightly better than the 1990 results (1.6/1.6), consistency across both years
