Abstract

Statistical comparisons by a t-test with a significance level of 5% (two-tailed). If the assumptions were violated by the data, a non-parametric test (Mann-Whitney U-test) was used. All statistical calculations and plotted graphs were performed using Statview (Abacus Concepts and Berkeley, CA). The authors (J.B. & J. B.) were also members of the French Society for Experimental Biology and for the French Association for the Study of the Population and the Environment and were assigned the membership fees and expenses for the congresses, seminars, meetings, symposia, publications and the statistical calculations. Supporting the authors' expenses for providing, maintaining and using their own laboratory for the entire time of laboratory and statistical activities. They have no financial or other interest in the present research. The present work belongs to the authors themselves. The present report was prepared by primary researchers and was written by J.B. and J. B. in cooperation with the other group members.

Blackburn's investigations of the birds generally ran the length of his long professional life, and he was particularly interested in the general ecology, distribution, and movements of the group of birds he called the "passerines" or the "small, mainly song birds" (1960). His investigations and reports included a few volumes devoted to the general biology of birds, other ecological matters, and the influence of the American Ornithologists Union on the general biology of birds, and a few other general ornithological and bird conservation and management studies, as well as a number of popular bird books.

These results suggest that social skills in general, and interpersonal communication abilities in particular, are related to the likelihood that an individual will successfully be hired into an effortful job. Furthermore, increasing training prior to the general bridge assessment can contribute to the performance of bridge workers and, consequently, to the generalization of bridge work to other contexts. In addition, the results suggest that the assessment of social skills is a useful tool for identifying and training job seekers. Finally, the results suggest that the assessment of social skills is a useful tool for identifying and training job seekers.
