

Laboratory Activity 42 — Student Laboratory Packet

Making Connections

A Laboratory Activity for the College Environment

Measuring Competencies

In their college environments, students are given feedback on progress in the natural world. But students themselves have indicated that progress requires a less linear approach. Rather, a complex web of interconnectedness must also be taught. It is this high-level distinction in practice that is developing future students. Many positive personal observations are a result of the progress that past has shown in these practices people and their ability.

Following and explaining connections in new or other ways, students are asked to be knowledgeable of the world around them. It is to be noted that in an ideal situation, the connections are very often the result of a complex, interconnected web of relationships. It is to be noted that the connections are very often the result of a complex, interconnected web of relationships. It is to be noted that the connections are very often the result of a complex, interconnected web of relationships.

In this part of the laboratory activity, you will explore a few observations about yourself and your experiences. You will also find the patterns in your life.
