Saguaro Cactus

What is a keystone species?

A keystone species is a species that has a disproportionately large effect on its environment relative to its abundance. The concept was developed by ecologist Robert Paine in 1969, based on his studies of intertidal rocky shore communities. Paine found that the removal of a single species, the starfish Pisaster ochaceus, led to a dramatic change in the community structure, with the number of species and the biomass of the community increasing significantly.

Keystone species can be found in a wide variety of ecosystems, from marine environments to terrestrial habitats. They can be predators, as in the case of the starfish, or they can be engineers, as in the case of the beaver. In the case of the beaver, the construction of dams creates a series of ponds that support a diverse array of species, including fish, birds, and mammals.

Why is the Saguaro a keystone species?

The Saguaro cactus is a keystone species in the Sonoran Desert. It provides food and shelter for a wide variety of animals, including birds, mammals, and reptiles. The cactus also plays a role in the desert's water cycle, storing water in its thick stems and releasing it slowly over time. This makes the Saguaro a critical component of the desert ecosystem.

For more information on the Saguaro cactus, visit the Sonoran Desert Museum website at www.sdmuseum.org. You can also find out more about the Saguaro cactus by visiting the Saguaro National Monument website at www.nps.gov/saguo.
