

Helping Others

Kara looked at the pages in the yearbook. She liked seeing all the pictures of her friends and remembering what a great year it had been. When she turned to the back, she found the pages that made her smile the most. There were pictures taken of a group of fourth-grade students helping at the animal shelter. Kara knew their class had made a difference. They had spent the day caring for the animals at the shelter. They had helped clean up both inside and outside the shelter. Many had brought in donations of food and other needed supplies. It had been an exhausting but also a rewarding day. The smiles on everyone's faces in the pictures reminded her of that.

"I like looking at those pictures, too," a voice said from behind her. Kara turned around and saw her friend Janice. Janice said, "I was just wondering what our next project would be."

Kara had been thinking the same thing. She already had several ideas. "Since it's almost summer, we will have a lot of extra time. I was hoping we could use some of the time to help out at the daycare here at school. The playground area looks like it could use some cleaning up, and I am sure we could get some new toys donated if we tried. I like the idea of helping out the younger children."

"That sounds perfect," Janice agreed. "I know Mrs. Brown said she would sponsor us, so we already have at least one adult who is willing to help. It feels good to help others."

Mrs. Brown walked over to Kara's desk and stood beside Janice. "I heard you two girls talking. I think you both have some wonderful ideas. You two are great role models for others your age. I wouldn't be surprised to see either one of you become governor of our state one day."

"I think I'll let Janice be the governor. I am going to try for president," Kara said with a smile.

"Well, whatever you two grow up to be, I am proud of you both right now."
