

Catch 22 Dialectical Journal

Catch-22 by Joseph Heller is a story set during the second half of World War II, revealing the lives of soldiers, the dilemmas of war and the paradoxes made to keep men in war by army leaders. The main character, John Yossarian is a US Air Force bombardier who has a strong desire to stay out of war, but unfortunately is unable to because of the standards set by the government, increasing the number of missions a soldier had to fly before he could leave. His squadron is stationed on the island of Pianosa, near the Mediterranean Sea. The main paradox was that if a man proved his insanity, he would have to fly his missions in order to prove his insanity, yet if he went sane, he would still stay in war and fly. Either way, all soldiers, sane or not, had to keep ...flying more missions...

It was to keep living, because death was at the corner for every man, as the average death rate was 5% per mission. Heller remarked how "the enemy is anybody who's going to get you killed, no matter which side he is on." This describes how the army began to lose faith in each other and aimed only to survive, as was the basic instinct of the human nature, stripped of all its values and sentiments. They learned to keep surviving for themselves instead of defending their country once they realized the war was useless and they were probably going to die eventually. This is important because it shows the true nature of the men in the army during the Vietnam.
