The MindTree Courtship

How a 2008 loss of a major prospect led to Innovation Gainesville—and a major local success

By Chris Evenden

When a prominent international software development company announced that they were adding a Gainesville outpost, the news caused no cause and confusion. But landing MindTree wasn't just a lucky break.

The hiring, as they say, was everything. A well-orchestrated deal, after news together March 17, when MindTree unveiled its plans to bring 400 jobs to Gainesville over the next five years with an average salary of $60,000.

"The playbook was Innovation Gainesville," says Steve Douglas, vice president and chief operating officer of the Gainesville Area Chamber of Commerce. "It was flexible enough to move quickly and make a great leap to the goal of creating hundreds of high-paying jobs."

The first seeds in one case when an email from MindTree zoomed to the University of Florida at 2:14pm Nov. 28.

The email came from Sunil Shajhra, MindTree's co-founder and president of the Americas, and went to Richard Richter, acting chairman of the computer science department at the University of Florida's College of Engineering.

Shajhra noted that MindTree, which is a large software and technology management consulting company in India, was planning to create software development shops in the United States and was considering Gainesville and other cities in the Southeast.

Richter responded at 4:11pm, expressing each of Shajhra' questions are answered below.

How many students are enrolled in engineering and computer science?

UF is the biggest producer of computer science graduates in the State of Florida and the second biggest in the Southeast. The computer science department has 704 undergraduate students, 341 master's students and 147 doctor of students.

THE SPORTING LIFE: Gainesville a Haven for Sports-Related Careers

By Olivia Hurtibert

There's no doubt about it: Gainesville is a city full of people with active lifestyles. There are lakes and bikers. There are athletic fields, pools and tennis courts. There's even an RSDA, drag strip. And, there are the University of Florida's first-rate athletic teaming facilities that draw an athletes from all over the world. Coaches all of this with the fact that the area's climate allows for outdoor activity most of the year, and you end up with a place that not only fosters bodybuilding college athletes on weekend weekends, but that is poised for a career on sports.

Going On

Gainesville has no shortage of sports complexes and opportunities to host sports [illegible] and events from all over the state. Jack Hughes, executive director of the Gainesville Sports Commission, [illegible] the small team group that is responsible for bringing sports
