Answer the following questions:

- 1.1 Describe the hydrologic cycle, components, and processes. (10%)
The hydrologic cycle is a continuous process that moves water around the planet. It is driven by the sun, which heats the water, causing it to evaporate. The water then condenses into clouds, which release it as precipitation. The water then flows into rivers, lakes, and oceans, or it infiltrates the ground and becomes groundwater. The water then flows back into the oceans, completing the cycle.
- 1.2 Describe erosion, and the following erosion parts: runoff, channels, meanders, oxbow lakes, and floodplains. (10%)
Erosion is the process of wearing away the Earth's surface. It is caused by the movement of water, wind, and ice. Runoff is the water that flows over the land surface. Channels are the paths that the water flows in. Meanders are the curves in the channels. Oxbow lakes are the lakes that are formed when a meander is cut off. Floodplains are the areas of land that are flooded when the water overflows the banks of the channel.
- 1.3 Describe drainage basins and divides. What is the significance of the continental divide? (10%)
A drainage basin is the area of land that drains into a single body of water. A divide is the line that separates two drainage basins. The continental divide is the line that separates the Atlantic and Pacific drainage basins. It is significant because it determines which ocean the water from a given area will flow into.
- 1.4 Describe drainage patterns, dendritic and rectangular drainage basins, radial, convergent, divergent, and anastomosing drainage patterns, the significance of topography, and the significance of the drainage pattern. (10%)
Drainage patterns are the ways in which the water flows over the land surface. Dendritic drainage patterns are the most common, and they are characterized by a single main channel with many smaller tributaries. Rectangular drainage patterns are characterized by a grid-like pattern of channels. Radial drainage patterns are characterized by channels that flow out from a central point. Convergent drainage patterns are characterized by channels that flow into a central point. Divergent drainage patterns are characterized by channels that flow away from a central point. Anastomosing drainage patterns are characterized by channels that flow in a series of loops. The significance of topography is that it determines the direction of the water flow. The significance of the drainage pattern is that it determines the way in which the water is distributed over the land surface.
- 1.5 Describe how erosion, transportation, and deposition are affected by grain size and velocity. (10%)
Erosion, transportation, and deposition are all affected by grain size and velocity. Larger grains are more difficult to erode and transport, and they are more likely to be deposited. Smaller grains are easier to erode and transport, and they are more likely to be deposited. Velocity also affects erosion, transportation, and deposition. Higher velocities lead to more erosion and transportation, and lower velocities lead to more deposition.
- 1.6 Describe alluvial fans, braided rivers, and oxbow lakes. (10%)
Alluvial fans are the fans of sediment that are formed at the base of a mountain. Braided rivers are the rivers that are formed by the deposition of sediment. Oxbow lakes are the lakes that are formed when a meander is cut off.
- 1.7 Describe how the erosion, transportation, and deposition are affected by the grain size and velocity. (10%)
Erosion, transportation, and deposition are all affected by grain size and velocity. Larger grains are more difficult to erode and transport, and they are more likely to be deposited. Smaller grains are easier to erode and transport, and they are more likely to be deposited. Velocity also affects erosion, transportation, and deposition. Higher velocities lead to more erosion and transportation, and lower velocities lead to more deposition.
- 1.8 Describe the different ways that sediment is transported by a river. (10%)
Sediment is transported by a river in three ways: bed load, suspended load, and dissolved load. Bed load is the sediment that is transported along the bottom of the river. Suspended load is the sediment that is transported in the water. Dissolved load is the sediment that is transported in the water as ions.
