Abstract

As the temperature decreases, the rate of molecular motion slowly decreases. Molecules that are bonded remain close to the other bonded particles, leaving the unbonded molecules at the front of the line and they move from the leading to the trailing end of the line. The former unbonded molecules are particles A and B, molecules that follow the pattern of the leading or primary subpopulation A of the subpopulation. The two particles are the ones who traveled the longest distance toward the rear of the line, particles C and D, the molecules that follow the pattern of the middle or secondary subpopulation and travel the shortest path to respond to stress and strain (Figure 1).
