algorithms and are useful in many applications. We can think of a search tree as a backward-chaining search using depth-first search. That is, starting with the goal, we first try to find a way to achieve the goal. If we fail, we try to find a way to achieve the goal by trying to achieve the goal by trying to achieve the goal. This is the approach taken by depth-first programming, which can achieve many of the same results as forward-chaining. Using logic programming combines the good ideas of forward-chaining with the forward-chaining efficiency of backward-chaining. It is also simpler, the search space is smaller, which means that the programmer will have less code to write. It is well worth a try to get an idea of how well-proven the technique is, it is the only one that is a generally efficient method of solving.

9.4.1 Backward-chaining of finding

Finding a way to achieve a goal is discussed in Section 9.4.1. The search space is smaller than the search space for forward-chaining, and many general rules can be used to find a way to achieve a goal. The search space is smaller than the search space for forward-chaining, and many general rules can be used to find a way to achieve a goal.
